Piketberg District: Local Architecture

Mud brick walls slowly melting away at this ruin at 'Voetpad.

These low-fired bricks, made on the farm, could be used again to fix the stairs to the barn at Kleigat.

Corrugated-iron sheets have replaced the thatch and protect the walls of this building at Wittewater.

The mill at Deze Hoek is kept in good condition by its proud owner.

Photographs show the dwelling house at Koopmanskraal that accidentally burned down after being carefully restored.

The longhouse at 'Voetpad was converted into two dwellings by adding a second kitchen onto the other end and an internal wall through the middle.

This longhouse at Verlorenvlei was restored and given a new life as a holiday home.

Recycled door

John & Pat Kramer, April 2015